Exercise 141

In your own words, state the rules for multiplying and dividing integers.

Solution

Multiplication and division can be done in any order because of the associative and commutative properties of multiplication. Multiplying two negative numbers results in a positive number. As a result, multiplying an even number of negative integers results in a positive number, and multiplying an odd number of negative integers results in a negative number.