

Exercise 3

Why does the vertical line test tell us whether the graph of a relation represents a function?

Solution

The horizontal axis of a graph represents the possible inputs of a function. Since a function must have exactly one output for each possible input, any vertical line must pass through the curve only once.